1843, the quantity has risen to 9,521 tons, of the value of $130,000 and upwards.

This is the result of the regulation allowing a drawback on State salt Mought to tide-water.

Gypsum has increased from 5 tons, of the value of $26 in 1842, to 281 tons, of the value of $1,407 in 1813.

Lead has increased from 310 tons and $20,000 in value in 1812, to $25 tons and $00,000 value in 1813.

Another very important topic set forth in the table, is the amount of Canal tonnage employed to and from Albany.

While the number of tons in 1813, is 1600 less than in 1812. the value of the cargoes this year has been $1,000,000 greats the value of the cargoes this year has been $1,000,000 greater than in 1812.

The Advertiser says this fact has been used by some as an argument against the culargement of the Eric Canal. The true reason fos the calargement is to be f und in the great reduction of the cost of transportation to be effected by it. Nothing short of the increased volume of water of the enlarged work can place our Canal trade on that permanently more economical footing which is essential.

With a Canal that can float boats of 150 to 200 tons burden, the prices of transportation, including freight and totls, can be reduced one half. The number of lockages is no sound test of the merits of this question; but if it were, the argument furnished by it is really in favor of the Enlargement, not against it, because, it the lockages diminish now, in consequence of putting heavier cargo's into the boats now employed, they would be visily more diminished in number, by employing boats three or four times as burdensome.

But this is not all. The Mississippi is a rival for trade, which will continually be gaining at our expense, till the enlargement is completed. To illustrate this, we may state that a barrel of Ohio pork can be carried to New Orleans for 85 cts, while, on our caseal, as it now is, the same burde cannot be placed in New-York for less than $1.50. Complete the enlargement, and it can be placed in New-York for 5 cents.

The following is a bird at tement of the aggregate of the Albany Canal Trade, to and from, for 1812, and 1843.
